Government Ready to Encourage Genius of Country.

In Submitting Original Service to Naval Consulting Board Use the Mails.
Board Too Busy For Personal Interviews—Immediate Trial For Anything of Value.

New York.—A few days ago publicity was given to the statement of a United States navy officer here that he was "postured to death by cranks with all sorts of crazy inventions they wished to hand over to the government."

The officer in question is one of the most able, the most valuable, in the service. There is no doubt either, as he says, that he has suffered great annoyance. At the same time the statement he made could not have been more unfortunate, says Maximilian Foster of the Vigilantes.

Instead of discouraging the so called cranks of inventors, the United States government at the moment is making every effort in its power to encourage and develop the country's inventive genius. Any suggestion that will in any way aid to terminate the war will be received with gratitude.

In submitting the invention or original device to the naval consulting board, 13 Park row, the following should be borne in mind:

Plans for such devices should be submitted by mail, and only by mail. In no case should they be submitted in person. The board is far too busy to give time for personal interviews.

In describing your invention simplicity is a great and necessary requisite. Only one invention should be described in each communication. If the inventor has, say, a half dozen inventions, let him set forth each in a separate communication.

In submitting an invention the inventor should be particular to state briefly its peculiar novelty.

It should be stated also whether the invention is in general use or whether the use has been limited. If the device is in an experimental state only this should be stated. It should also be stated whether it has only been worked out on paper or whether it is an entirely new theory still requiring development.

State also whether the invention is patented, and if so attach a copy of the patent. If patent is pending the typewritten specification and a print of the drawing should be attached.

If the inventor has no mechanical knowledge it would be well for him to get some one, a trained engineer preferably, to typewrite a complete description of the device and make drawings of it, where such drawings are possible. In order that the inventor may protect himself, let him sign and date both the drawings and the description and have two witnesses also sign and date both. It also would be well for him to keep the originals (both drawings and specifications) and forward only a carbon copy of the specification and a copy of the drawing.

If remuneration is expected of the United States government it should be
